

Aviation Graduates again

By Ohaga Paul

A University don has recognised the Eldoret based Aviation Institute for its quest to empower students with necessary skills in diversified fields.

Professor Eshitemi was the chief guest at the 4th graduation ceremony held at the Eldoret town hall on the 17th September 2005.

He congratulated the graduants for their hard work and appealed to them to keep up with their good work, adding that they should pursue their higher levels of studies.

While acknowledging that the college offers theoretical, educational and industrial attachments, he described it as a highly esteemed and self sufficient institute "It does not only aim at satisfying the aviation needs, but also commercial needs," he said

Professor Eshitemi further challenged the graduants against relying on their parents for their up keep, saying that they have the knowledge to do something of their own. He called upon employers to consider aviation graduants describing them that they have the good potential.

Mr. Jackson Travuha, EATI founder and Director told those graduating to keep up with their good work and not to loose the focus, for there is a better tomorrow. He told parent to ensure that they registered their students with institutions with recognised International examining bodies like ICM, which, he said gave candidates the needed chances to pursue their careers.

The Principal of the institute Mr. Samuel Mwambura told the graduants to keep off the irresponsible lives and warned them against pandemic diseases.

It was joy and happiness as more than 250 students of Eldoret Aviation Training Institute were awarded with diploma honours. The colourful ceremony was attended by hundreds of relatives and friends who came to witness the annual event.
